

Should I stay or should I go (now)?

I'm with Peter Clausi when he writes Goodbye August, you crappy unhappy month. Published, there – done. He asked me to take my time and edit as I saw fit. Unedited, I like Peter's prose. Sitting on 3 feature company stories, I need another day to review, contemplate and consider what is happening in the wonderful world of Canadian small caps. Appropriate the single by the Clash is playing in the background with 'Should I stay or should I go?'

This is the title and the theme.

A banker from Connecticut (CT) calls me yesterday. "But this is not a 'rare metal' story" I start after reviewing the fact sheet. "A critical metals story, yes – but I am confused." He continues and explains that Canadian exploration companies are desperate for new audiences, and that there is nothing left for them in Canada.

I sigh. Indeed, I ask him whether his road shows through Montana (yes, you read this right, Montana) work. After all we are always about 'what works' here at InvestorIntel, we are changing our sell line to the above this Fall as none of us have time for anything that is ineffective. Heck if Montana is the new untapped investment audience for resource investment, let's check the flights...

Considering if I can name a city in Montana, I review another email from a Vancouver investor who writes me that if "...people sell their pot gains before Oct 18 we may get a resources market. If they stay long or get longer they will trap all the spec money. I am only long pot as of mid August. Sell all Oct 18 and then get short with all my money. See what happens".

Alright enough breathing exercises, our production manager reaches out to the company that claims they have a technology for meditation and breathing exercises that will increase my revenue – we accept their media offer to send me one. The cannabis expert on our team (Gen-Z) rolls his eyes at me, I explain that we try anything once here.

SO, what did happen in August worth noting? Our assistant publisher Raj Shah sent me the list of InvestorIntel movers and shakers via tweets for stock performance for August 2018. Here are Raj's Top 15 tweets for the month of August:

Also, people ask me all the time “what is happening in the market”. My response is – watch what people are watching and check our TRENDING section. Our social media director Sharron Clayton is brilliant and once a week she tweets out what is TRENDING from our site: I recommend watching this data – as our secret sauce is simple: watch and listen. Watch what others are watching and try and figure out if this is their queue for speculation, buying, selling or simply an interest in the topic... it's simple – it's what works.
