Moovly has struck a chord with large enterprise customers seeking to integrate a feature-rich video creation system into existing platforms

Toronto, April 23, 2021 – Peter Clausi with InvestorIntel.com, a leading online source of investor information, interviews Chris Thompson, President of eResearch Corp., the independent source of equity research, about his latest analyst report on Moovly Media Inc. (TSXV: MVY).

In this InvestorIntel interview, which may also be viewed on YouTube (click here to subscribe to the InvestorIntel Channel), Peter has Chris discussing his price target for Moovly, the catalysts behind the stock's continued growth and why he thinks you should consider becoming a shareholder. Chris evaluates the company using revenue projections and a discounted cash flow with Moovly's focus on larger Enterprise Customers and its steady stream of partnership news to validate his position.

Chris starts when Peter asks why the stock has performed so well this last quarter, "the product itself has grown; it's got now 3.7 million users who are using the Application. It also has got some great partnerships and I think that just the momentum of those announcements and those deals have helped investors become more aware of the company – it must be driving revenue upwards as well."

He adds: "They do have a good e-commerce base that's out there growing steadily month on month, but they had a bit of a boost with the COVID stay at home (audience) where people wanted to make videos. Moovly focuses on (offering) a feature-rich platform for video creation and so it really sort of keyed in for people staying at home and wanting to create videos from home. "

"But I think more and more it's the enterprise customers who are coming in who are using some of their features like their API to integrate into their own products – as they also have an automation tool that allows you to customize videos very quickly… those types of features have really sort of struck a chord with the larger enterprise clients who are looking for a partner on the video creation platform."
