

Vance White on the next boom in the commodity cycle

written by InvestorNews | July 25, 2019

“I would put that the cannabis and perhaps cryptocurrency markets are going to roll over into the next boom in the commodity cycle. It does not matter whether you are talking about gold, silver, copper, lead, zinc. With the evolution of the electric vehicles and demand for battery-grade nickel and cobalt components that comprise those batteries, you will see an evolution with regards to demand for those specific minerals in general. We feel very hopeful that down the road the prices for those minerals and gold will be significantly higher than what they are right now.” States Vance White, President, CEO and Director of Noble Mineral Exploration Inc. (TSXV: NOB), in an interview with InvestorIntel’s Tracy Weslosky.

Vance went on to discuss Noble’s 2018 drill program on the Lucas Gold Project. He said that the company has identified a 1,700 meter gold mineralized trend that has the potential to host economic gold grades. Vance also provided an update on the preliminary results from mineralogical studies at Crawford Nickel-Cobalt project near Timmins. He said that the results were very encouraging from the project which is close to existing infrastructure including the Kidd Creek milling complex.
