

FutureVault's John Shackleton on the importance of information security in the financial service industry

written by InvestorNews | May 14, 2021

In a recent InvestorIntel interview, Tracy Weslosky spoke with John Shackleton, CEO of FutureVault, about FutureVault's secure, cloud-based document management solutions and the growing digital vault market.

Mr. Shackleton is former President and CEO of OpenText Corporation (NASDAQ: OTEX | TSX: OTEX) where he led the company's growth from $60 million to $1.3 billion in revenue. In this InvestorIntel interview, which may also be viewed on YouTube (click here to subscribe to the InvestorIntel Channel), Mr. Shackleton went on to say that the modern platform and domain expertise of the company attracted him to join FutureVault. He added unlike its competitors who offer horizontal services, "FutureVault offers very specific solutions for the financial services industry." Mr. Shackleton also stressed the importance of information security in the financial services space owing to the highly sensitive nature of financial data. FutureVault has a patent for its automated document filing and processing methods and systems granted by the United States Patent and Trademark Office.
